Echoes from the Poisoned Well

Global Memories of Environmental Injustice

Edited by Sylvia Hood
Washington, Paul C.
Rosier,
and Heather
Goodall

2006
INTRODUCTION

Julie Sze

New York City Planning and Community Memory
Environmental Justice, Urban AND REDEVELOPMENT

LOCAL NARRATIVES OF RACE, SPACE AND PROCESS

"The process of building wealth and community is not a linear one. The development of neighborhoods is an ongoing process that involves cooperation, collaboration, and constant adaptation. It is a journey that requires the active participation of all members of the community, from residents to local businesses to city officials. The success of any development project is dependent on the commitment of everyone involved, and it is important that we continue to work together to ensure that our neighborhoods are vibrant, diverse, and inclusive.

In the face of economic challenges, it is crucial that we prioritize the needs of our communities. This means investing in infrastructure, providing access to affordable housing, and supporting local businesses. It also means advocating for policies that promote environmental sustainability and social equity. By working together, we can create a brighter future for all.

We must remember that the development of our neighborhoods is a reflection of our values as a community. It is a testament to our commitment to building a better future for everyone. Let us continue to work together to make our neighborhoods the best they can be."

---

This statement was adapted from a speech by Mayor John Doe at a recent community meeting.
CONCLUSION

The city and private pollution and development. Determination of the

NOTES
The decision of government agencies to organize environmental hearings, may be controversial, and the decision must be made with careful consideration of the public interest.

The decision must be made with careful consideration of the public interest.

Environmental disputes sometimes result from conflicting definitions of

Jane Brooksford Rye
The Community
Conflicting Views of Nature in a Mixed
Ferrell Parkway

12

1999
22, 23
22, 23
22, 23